

Left: The East Entrance to Adventure Island. Note the well-maintained landscaping, the theming, the colourful rides, and the fencing/litter bins within the park. These all combine to create a first class environment.

Below: The Green Scream. One of the more visually impressive rides, and an example of the high standard with which all the rides have been installed at this park. This park (which is smaller than Dreamland) has three roller coasters, all permanent rides. With the exception of the Scenic Railway, all of Dreamland's roller coasters are travelling rides, and are standing on wooden blocks (as at a travelling fair).

Above: The signage within the park is to a consistent theme, and all adds to the quality experience.

Left: Care and attention has even been employed on design of the ticket booths. As can be seen from this photograph, there is no shortage of people to purchase them!

Right: All aspects of the park, down to the smallest of details (such as this clock showing when the park closes), are consistently themed and designed to enhance the visitor experience.

Below: Another brightly painted, well themed ride (pictured shortly before the park gates opened), which aims to provide something different to the typical travelling fair. The ride is further enhanced by the use of picket fencing and landscaping.

Above: At the western end of the park is another roller coaster. Here the attraction is fully “built in” to the site (as opposed to standing on blocks), with a permanent station building and landscaping. The unused area is enhanced with picnic tables, attractive litter bins and larger-than-life ice cream cones and Coke cans. This is a wonderful, safe environment for a family day out. There has been no attempt at Dreamland to aspire to this level of visitor experience.

Right: Traditional attractions, such as the lighthouse-themed helter skelter (pictured) and the American Whip have been retained and are beautifully maintained.
